EXTRACTS.

LONGFELLOW ON ROBERT BURNS.

I too am the fields of Ayr.

A ploughman, who, in fall or fair,

Sings at his task.

So clear, we know not if it is

The lever's song we hear, or his.

Nor care to hear.

For him the ploughing of those fields

A more colossal harvest yields

Than avarice of grain;

Songs flow with people from the ry,

The plough's call, the oxen's cry,

Sing in his brain.

Touched by his hand, the way-side wood

Becomes a flower; the furrowed road

Becomes a stream.

Is clothed with beauty; gone and gone

And heather, where his footstep presses

The brighter comes.

He steps of love, whose flame illumine

The darkness of low cottages; room;

He feels the fire.

The cheerless under-tow and stream

Of wayward passions, and no less

The keen remorse.

At moments, wrestling with his fate,

His voice is harsh, but not with hate;

The breath-wind brings

Above the seven-door his fall

His bitter tale, his drop of gall,

Upon his tongue.

But still the burden of his song

Is love of right, disdain of wrong,

Its master-chorus

Are Manhood, Freedom, Brotherhood;

It discards but an interlude

Between the war 'n'

And then to die young, and leave

Unfinished what he might achieve!

Yet better so!

Is he then wandering up and down,

An old man, in a country town,

Faint and poor?

For now he haunts his native land

As an immortal youth; his hand

Guides every plough;

His voice is each rushing brook,

Each rushing brook.

His presence haunts this room to-night,

From that far coast.

Welcome beneath this roof of mine

Welcome! this vacant chair is thine.

Dost guest and ghost!

ADDITION AND POPE ON WOMAN.

The poem is, in effect, a satire upon female frivolity. It continues the strain of mockery against hoops and patches; and their wearers, which supplied Addison and his colleagues with the materials of so many of his satires. It is a satire upon the
